

ON INTELLIGENCE

Spies and Secrecy in an Open World

Forward by Senator David L. Boren (D-OK)
President of the University of Oklahoma

This book is about the reinvention of national, defense and business intelligence within the larger context of an open world....a primer on the role of intelligence qua sources, methods, and community....

Robert David Steele, OSS CEO, has been twice-named to the Microtimes 100: "Industry leaders and unsung heroes who... helped create the future", and was the first recipient of the SOURCES eJournal "Sages of the Ages" award.

Few have thought as deeply or imaginatively about such questions as a super-smart, forty-one-year-old former marine and intelligence officer named Robert D. Steele... Steele's vision will thrill many—and send a quiver down the spines of others.

Striking A New Balance

Closing Thoughts

- 90% of what we need to know is not secret.
- Global coverage is unaffordable by any single organization or even any one nation.
- National intelligence can be the heart of national security & national prosperity but only if it responds to 21st Century realities.
- Congress can and should legislate reform, but only the President can lead this charge.
